Criminal Case Study 2, Part 1

Following a bench trial before you, Peter Logan was convicted of sexual assault in the second degree, unlawful imprisonment, assault in the first degree, and lesser offenses stemming from a six-hour siege of his family home. During that time he bound, beat and raped his wife of sixteen years, Dorothy Logan, causing internal injuries. He left her unconscious in their master suite located on the lower level of their Aquino Village home, and from his wife's cell phone dialed 911, alerting the dispatcher to a "murder" at their home address. Their two children, Peter, Jr. (age 15) and Darcy (age 11), asleep upstairs in the "children's wing" of their house, were awakened by sirens, crackling radios, and the sound of their front door being broken in with a police battering ram. They witnessed paramedics remove their bleeding, unconscious mother and rush her away in an ambulance. She required three surgeries to repair damage to her spleen, left arm and jaw.

In a victim impact statement, Ms. Logan has asked that you impose the maximum term of incarceration, eight to 24 years' imprisonment. She states that Mr. Logan ruled the house for many years through verbal and physical assaults upon her and their two children, that left them so traumatized that her son, Peter, still will not return to the family home. Their only chance for finding a sense of safety and security is knowing that their father is in a place where he cannot hurt them again.

You have also received a letter from Peter, Jr. He presents a different view. His father, he writes, "is the best Dad a son could ever want." He describes camping adventures, afternoons playing softball, patient help with homework, and steady support in his Scout troop, where his father was an assistant troop leader. He states that his mother "is a total loser," who badgered his father incessantly until he "cracked on that night." Their home was such a mess they were ashamed to bring friends home; in any event, "Mom was such a mess, too, we didn't want anyone to see her. Assuming she'd even be awake." The best thing that ever happened to him, he states, has been moving to the home of his friend Scott Plano, where he went on the day of the assault and has remained since. "Please, your Honor," Peter writes, "don't take away from me the only good parent I have ever known. My dad and I will live together and you will see. Without Mom dragging us down, things will be great. Please give him a chance. He deserves that after everything he's been through."

Letters from many members of Troop 48, including scouts and their parents, attest that Mr. Logan has been an inspired scout master and respected leader of the boys. Colleagues at Mr. Logan's company, New Foundations Digital, attest to his integrity and reliability as a founding partner in their very successful company. Several moving stories of his generosity to employees in times of family need are recounted.

The probation report is more mixed. Mr. Logan's community ties are indisputable, and his high profile there is outstanding. The investigating probation officer found Mr. Logan less than cooperative, however, expressing no remorse and continuing to blame his wife, to whom he referred as "the nut job," for what happened to her. He insisted that he was defending himself, as she was "very unstable" and often attacked him. During these times, he asserted ("claiming extreme embarrassment") she "was like a nymphomaniac," alternating between assaulting him and demanding sex. He claims he had to seek prescriptions for Viagra in order to keep up with her needs. He was deeply concerned about what would happen to his children if he were incarcerated: "they have to be protected from her."

Defense counsel seeks a sentence of five years' probation, combined with anger management, counseling, and parenting classes. A full order of protection would be in effect as to Ms. Logan but not as to his children. Contact with the children would be worked out "over in the Matrimonial Part, where this matter should have been in the first place." He argues that both parents "have failed these children, not out of malice but out of human tragedy." If home life was as violent and abusive as the mother claimed, she deserves to be prosecuted for exposing her children to such an environment. The court "can't have it both ways." Since she never sought help for the violence she now claims, she is less than credible. She was injured, no doubt about it, and that's "a shame and something no one should have to go through," but "let's be sure we understand what really happened here." The extenuating circumstances warrant the court's compassion and leniency.
