

NCSC Holds CTC7 in Baltimore, continued

In addition to the keynote sessions, attendees could choose from more than 30 educational sessions. The CTC7 staff conveniently grouped these into nine different interest areas to assist the attendees in focusing on their own particular areas of interest: court facility design, courtroom technology, distance learning, electronic documents, future technology, information sharing, judicial decision support systems, privacy and public access, and systems engineering.

Perhaps one of the most popular features of any CTC is the vendor show. CTC7 was no exception. Nearly 100 vendors registered to display a wide variety of technologies that can be used in courts. The vendor show provided an opportunity for the attendees to see the latest technology in the marketplace on display.

There were several Special Interest Group meetings held during the conference. These afforded an opportunity for people with a particular interest to gather and share information. The CTC7 lab was an interesting feature of the conference and provided a unique learning experience for those who attended. The CyberCafé was a popular place to hang out and keep in touch with others using the tools of technology that many have become accustomed to using. CTC7 offered all of this and much more.

Congratulations to the National Center staff for organizing another successful conference. CTC members are proud that we were able to join as a sponsor of this exciting event.
